Thoughts For The Week

- * Helping grownups with household tasks is one way that children can feel important. There are many things you do around the house that the children could do with you. Cooking and baking give children a chance to learn about tastes, smells, textures, and changes that take place. They use lots of energy when they mix, knead, pound, or beat ingredients, and they can share in the pride of having prepared a snack or lunch.

- * Listening carefully and working carefully are other themes for this week. If we take the time to look and listen, we can learn a lot from the many things around us. And when we're working on a project, we often need concentration. When we encourage children to work carefully, we help them learn to feel proud of what they can accomplish.
